MAKING OUR COMMUNITIES SAFER

The first job of any government is to keep its citizens safe. We passed six new laws to combat crime and give law enforcement the authority and the resources they need – and they are in force today. Notable among those accomplishments are:

COMBATTING HATE ACT

If someone tries to intimidate you in your community or prevent you from reaching your place of worship, police now have the authority to arrest them.

BAIL AND SENTENCING REFORM ACT

If someone commits a violent offence, the onus is now on them to prove to a court why they can be trusted on bail.

PROTECTING VICTIMS ACT

Anyone who shares a fake, sexualised image of you or your children online can face up to ten years in prison.

SECURE BORDERS, STRONGER SYSTEM

We have taken back control of immigration – asylum claims are down by a third, temporary foreign worker arrivals by half, and international student arrivals by 60% – so we can rebuild a sustainable system consistent with Canadian values.

SAFETY ONLINE

As artificial intelligence transforms daily life, we will help Canadians harness its potential while protecting your data, your privacy, and your kids.

RETURNING TO PARLIAMENT WITH A CLEAR FOCUS

GREGOR ROBERTSON

Member of Parliament for Vancouver Fraserview-South Burnaby

Just over a year ago, in a rapidly changing and more volatile world, Canadians elected our government with a clear mandate: to build a stronger, more independent, more resilient Canada.

Last session, 19 pieces of legislation received Royal Assent in just 14 weeks. The majority of legislation we introduced – and will continue to introduce – focuses on what matters to Canadians: bringing down costs and keeping Canadians safe.

As we head into a new parliamentary session, we're getting back to work to bring your costs down, maintain our sovereignty, and make our communities safer.

Canada is boldly unleashing our enormous potential, and we are just getting started.
